But by far the largest percentage of sugar produced is a brown sugar of 96 polarization, which is sold to the refining companies for the production of white granulated sugar. The three grades mentioned above are produced as what might be termed first sugars. There are always produced second sugars coming from the molasses from the first sugars, which are always brown in color and of somewhat lower polarization. These are often mixed with the first sugar or sold independently as molasses sugars and vary in polarization from 88 up to 93 and 94. The molasses from these sugars is stored over the summer and a third crop often obtained. These third sugars are of still lower polarization and color, ranging from 80 to 85. The small production of white granulated sugar is generally sold direct for consumption to local grocers. The prime yellow clarified is many times sold by brokers who represent the sugar planter, principally in New Orleans, to the sugar refiners. However, some little goes through the brokers to a middle man, who then disposes of it to the final consumer. In New Orleans there is an association of brokers conducting what is known as the New Orleans Sugar and Eice Exchange. Here samples of the daily shipments are exhibited on tables, and the buyers can offer prices to the brokers for the product as per sample. A large proportion of the Louisiana crop and also Texas...
