Owens, for defendants. Evans, P. J. (After stating the facts.) It will not be seriously disputed that a person conveying premises by description in terms bounding them by a street of a specified width, the title to which he also owns, ordinarily gives his grantee the right to insist upon the existence and enjoyment of such street. So where an owner of land had it surveyed and laid off into lots, caused a plat of the same to be made which referred to a designated strip of land as a street, and sold the land with reference to such plat, a right of way over the strip of land designated in the plat as a street passes to every purchaser at that sale, and the seller of the lots is estopped either from closing up the strip, or maintaining an...
