Excerpt: . . . those who got over it were so weakened and disabled, that they were in no condition to do any the least service, nor were thoroughly restored till after they had been some months in their winter-quarters. Never had the Russian army lost so ss many horses and oxen: this went so far, that though they had taken with them some hundreds of supernumeraries of those creatures, for a change in the service of the artillery, they had not, towards the end of the campaign, enough of them for the draught; for want of which, they were obliged to bury in the deserts a great part of their bomb-shells and cannon-balls. A great quantity of them was also left with the carriages in Poland, . which the train of artillery, and a part of the army, had crossed. The forages in the steps, beginning to fall intolerably short, from the Tartars having set fire to the grass, the army was forced to march, and encamp several days successively, without having any fodder for cattle of any kind. This obliged Munich to divide his army into several columns, keeping the rear-one with himself. By this means he greatly reljeved the forages. Towards the end of September, the whole army re-entered the Ukrain, and there went into winter-quarters. The marshal took up his at Kiow. In the way to the Dniester, the Rusiian army had taken the Complaint: liberty of passing over the Polish territories, upon which the...
