It is the concentrating, when possible, of street fixtures into compact and economical groups. To be sure, it is but a detail of the subject under discussion; yet since the scheme (in one of its phases) has been carefully worked out, the design may be of real value. As the accompanying illustrations show, the design forms a monumental electric fountain and aquatic garden: includes a drinking fountain, two bootblackening stands and a public toilet-room, as well as such minor departments of the public service as fire-alarm and police call-boxes, street...
